

Races for Cuyahoga County auditor in 1990s bore marks of Frank Russo's scheming

CLEVELAND, Ohio — Sixteen years ago, a little-known welder with a politically popular surname challenged incumbent Frank Russo in the Democratic primary for Cuyahoga County recorder.

However, shortly before voters went to the polls in 1996, James Gallagher inexplicably dropped out of the race -- and a year later landed on Russo's payroll.

In 1998, the process repeated itself: Gallagher filed to run against Russo in the Democratic contest for county auditor, then withdrew before the primary. And four months later, Russo hired him at the auditor's office and gave him a $5,500 bump in pay. (See copies of Plain Dealer newspaper clippings from the candidate filings and election results in the DocumentCloud viewer below.)

Former Cuyahoga County Auditor Frank Russo.

Gallagher continued to collect annual raises, and his salary climbed from $29,000 in 1997 to $55,000 in 2010, when Russo resigned and later pleaded guilty to 21 corruption-related crimes, including fixing the 2006 election race for county auditor.

The federal investigators who pursued Russo and more than 50 other officials and contractors for corruption have made no public mention of Gallagher or the Democratic primaries of 1996 and 1998.

But a Plain Dealer review of the two primaries and the hiring of Gallagher by Russo found striking similarities to the rigged race for auditor in 2006.

That year, according to prosecutors, Russo arranged for Joe Gallucci, who ran a car wash and a chain of pizza shops, to launch a sham Republican campaign for auditor.

Gallucci then dropped out, but not until it was too late for Republicans to find another candidate. The move allowed Russo to skate to victory without spending thousands of dollars on campaign advertising.

Then, in November 2006, Russo rewarded Gallucci with a $68,000-a-year job.

Gallucci has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit bribery. He testified in January at former County Commissioner Jimmy Dimora's federal racketeering trial that he initially thought the idea of manipulating the election was "crazy."

But former County Auditor Tim McCormack, a Democrat who knew Russo's circle well, said plotting a fake bid with Gallagher would make sense.

Gallagher is a powerful enough name in county politics to possibly scare off any other would-be Russo opponents, McCormack said.

"It was a long, long-standing practice in some Democratic Party circles to structure your opposition," he said. "They played for keeps. It was a serious business, and they had it figured out."

Gallagher, 54, of Lakewood, had no comment.

Russo's attorney, Republican Roger Synenberg, who was the chairman of the county Board of Elections in 1996, also declined to comment.

Russo's general-election opponent in 1996, Republican attorney Susan Lawko, said in an interview that she sensed at the time that her opponent was up to no good.

"When you walked out of that building, you felt like you had to take a shower," Lawko said. "It was that dirty."

Lawko, who has since moved from Cleveland to Hudson, ran on a platform that the recorder's office should be eliminated, a change voters eventually approved as part of a county charter in 2009. But, she said, her campaign was the casualty of Republican infighting.

She didn't stand a chance against Russo.

 Frank Russo starts his new job as county auditor today.

 The Cuyahoga County Democratic Party's Central Committee voted unanimously last night to make Russo, who had served four terms as county recorder, the new auditor.

 He replaces Tim McCormack, who gave up the post after being elected county commissioner last November.

 "This is a dream I have had all my life - to stand before the precinct committee people and be nominated auditor," said Russo. "I want to bring unity to county government."

 Russo, 47, of Mayfield Heights, will oversee an office with some 250 employees and will make $67,000 a year.

 He got his start in politics as a Mayfield Heights councilman before becoming recorder in 1984.

 Democratic Party Chief Jimmy Dimora said Russo was the only person who had expressed interest in the auditor's post to party leaders. The party's Central Committee has the responsibility of filling vacant county offices held by Democrats.

 The office of county auditor, held by McCormack for 14 years, is responsible for establishing the value of all property in Cuyahoga County, as well as approving grocery store scales and gasoline pumps and licensing sidewalk vendors.

 Last night's meeting, attended by 420 committee members, was held at the United Auto Workers

Gallagher, who had worked for 20 years for the United Brotherhood of Carpenters before he was hired by Russo, still works as a senior clerk for the county, greeting visitors on the third floor of the County Administration Building.

The county cut his salary to $34,000 last month as part of an effort to better align pay with job qualifications.

He received a below-average performance review in 2005 and has been disciplined twice in the last two years for more than 26 hours of unexcused absences, according to his personnel file. He argued in June that he was unaware of his balance of sick leave.

After being told about Gallagher being hired after dropping out of the primaries, County Executive Ed FitzGerald asked county Inspector General Nailah Byrd to investigate.

"By now we know that was unfortunately the way things happened," FitzGerald said. "Whenever we get solid information that substantiates any of the outrageous behavior that's been on display in the corruption trial, then we'll take decisive action."
